Some non-technical friends of mine who heard me say I was a professional photographer with Photoshop and that I use it constantly assumed I was an unemployed ad agency worker. Of course, ad agency workers usually try to spell "photoshopped" correctly. Photoshop is also a popular choice of image-editing software among users, and there are a couple of good free programs, such as GIMP (www.gimp.org), that allow you to perform some basic edits. Table 11-1 provides a list of the basic Photoshop tools and controls. Table 11-1 Photoshop Basic Tools and Controls

Future, the social network created by ex-Facebookers that promised to make it easy to share photos, has been launched by two Russian entrepreneurs. The two men behind the new startup launched their own platform earlier today with a set of promises to deliver a social network that is easy to use and integrate with other services. They told VentureBeat they named the company after the Future Forum, a tech conference they co-founded in Moscow in 2013. The Future Forum gathers prominent technology and media leaders in the city, and the founders claim it has helped initiate the current e-mail, SMS, web and social media communications revolution. The site has a few thousand users as of writing, but its founders have started to raise money. They've already raised more than $1.2 million, according to two investors they told VentureBeat will be investing alongside them. The company is launching its beta version of its platform, called V-next, this afternoon. You'll find the first sections of the site live here, and the final version of the site is supposed to be launched later this month. "We are trying to simplify sharing and improve the user experience, while bringing people together in the social media landscape," said Sergey Gorbunov, the chief executive of OneStop Systems, the startup that developed the social networking platform and is launching it today, which they also describe as a platform. "The idea was to create a simple platform that needs no installation, no plugins or external dependencies." The site promises to integrate with other services such as Instapaper and Xobni, but not with other social networks. "We started with the idea that you'd be able to share the link to things as easy as you do with a twitter link," Gorbunov said. He believes the site can compete with existing social networks because of how easy and simple it is to use. "If we can keep it so easy to use, the future would be open and we can ask people to share their ideas without any filters," he said. Just like the founders of other new social networks, Gorbunov and his co-founder Igor Kalinin believe that their company will become the place where people share everything they do or want to share, and be the Web 2.0 successor to Twitter, Facebook, and Google+. They're also promising that they're investing in the technology, not just in the people. V-next is available as a web app

DAVIS — If you walk in the front door of the Sandpoint Police Department at 25 N. 3rd St., you will see one of the largest groups of officers you will see in your lifetime. A group of 45 officers was standing and waiting for a single Uber car this morning on Southwest Boulevard, and they had a list of people needing to be contacted to pick them up. "This is the busiest scene I've ever seen in my life," said Sandpoint Police Sgt. Jason Hightower. A sign on the building front said it all: "Our STAFF ONLY pick-up and drop-off will be Monday-Friday from 8am to 6pm, 6pm until midnight." The reason is simple: The flood of calls to the dispatch center is overwhelming the department's ability to handle them, and so they are asking for a few hours where they're not able to take or make phone calls for help. "It's not one specific incident, but it's a multitude of calls all day long," said Sgt. Hightower. "It's getting to the point where we can't handle it." The flood of phone calls comes because people are calling in about their safety and that of their families. It comes as another of the newly devised efforts to ease the transition of first responders after an active shooter situation. For now, they're asking people not to call the dispatch center to make a report. Instead, they're asking for people to call dispatch at 406-342-6911. "We want to make sure we have an accurate record of everything being reported so that we can later verify if that call really did come in or not," said Sgt. Hightower. If you're waiting for a report for your own personal safety, ask yourself if that might be a false report, too, he said. "If that's something that might be a bogus call, the department will do it's best to investigate and check into that," he said. Otherwise, it's not the police department's fault if they report that they're aware you're running from a gunman, for example. "If somebody's calling in,
