Mourn the demise of rock'n'roll, but don't mourn the true greatness of New York's most influential underground band. Since 1977, the Spinanes have been one of the most inspiring and soulful bands around, but everyone was blind to it. The Spinanes started their career with Skid Roper, the title of their first album, and it is where many people will start their journey with them. But how many people realize that's where they started? The Spinanes' most essential albums—I Want You, So You Can't Get Away, Life in Technicolor, and The Big Score—are classic American folk with a touch of psychedelia. (Plus, the cover of that first album is a still-classic photograph by Robert Hayes!) They were like American Joni Mitchell, if she were actually from New York. The Spinanes were a trio featuring guitarist Fred Frith, bassist Bucket Kahane, and drummer Roy Estrada, who was in the first lineup of Parliament-Funkadelic. Their recordings, released on Philly's ESP label in the '70s, are like a miracle. Songs with deeply spiritual lyrics (like "Prison of Love" and "The Whisperer") are a key part of the music, but you'll also hear plenty of jazz, blues, psychedelia, folk, country, and soul. Their big breakthrough came in 1978 with the release of I Want You, So You Can't Get Away, a tightly coiled, crackling blend of exuberance and sorrow, and a perfect example of how vibrant folk music can be, and still be very intimate. The next year's Life in Technicolor brought the Spinanes even closer to Mitchell's spirit, while also discovering a fully working trio. On songs like the title track, The Bronx Is Burning, and The
